Schools Make Madison Advocates	2005 W Beltline Hwy Ste 203, Madison, WI, 53713	Revenue limits for public school districts have not had an inflation level adjustment in over a decade. As costs rise, it is essential that our schools have the funding to attract high-quality educators and provide every student with a high quality education. While communities across Wisconsin overwhelmingly support referenda to raise revenue limits locally, this model is inconsistent, unsustainable, and inefficient. Other education funding metrics, such as reimbursements for required special education costs, have experienced a similar stagnation. All the while, federal dollars have been impactful but reliance on one-time conditional disbursements has created a funding cliff in a time when schools are already under exceptional financial strain. Healthy K12 is not just the concern of schools and educators, but of all parties with an interest in the long-term health of our state. Businesses in particular have a strong interest in the success of schools. While businesses across the country are reeling from a declining labor pool, that issue is exacerbated in Wisconsin given the consistent trend of more people moving away than to the state. Now more than ever, a strong workforce begins with strong schools. Beyond attracting and retaining working families, education provides a means to mitigate barriers which may otherwise render individuals unemployed, incarcerated, or on government assistance. With an unprecedented budget surplus projection, there is no better time to invest for success.
